This is a quote from Frederic Passy. He was a peace activist and eventually won a Novel Peace Prize. He was very concerned about the build up of armies in Europe in 1895.  "The entire able-bodied population are preparing to massacre one another; though no one, it is true, wants to attack, and everybody protests his love of peace and determination to maintain it, yet the whole world feels that it only requires some unforeseen incident, some unpreventable accident, for the spark to tall in a flashand blow all Europe sky-high."	- 1
<ul> <li>This is a quote from General von Schlieffen, explaining the logic behind his strategy:         "Germany must strivefirst to strike down one of the allies while the other is kept occupied, but then, when the one [enemy] is conquered, it must, by exploiting its railways, bring a superiority of numbers to the other theater of war, which will also destroy the other enemy."</li> </ul>	• 2
