Today I was invited to speak to parents at a childcare center about Montessori. These were parents ready to send their kids to kindergarten next year. Their questions reminded me of what a different world K-12 education is for families to navigate and what a scary experience it is to send your children off to be scooped up and led through probably the most challenging social experience they will ever have. They wanted to know about Montessori, but they also wanted to know how their child would be loved, fed and cherished. Really it is their fundamental needs that concerns them the most. I loved sharing how that is the core of our work here at SPM and there are families ready to support and mentor them through the maze of education. It was also a reminder of how privileged we are to be trusted with your children. I remember that leap so clearly as a parent myself. It seems like two weeks not six years ago. I am grateful my family had a soft place to land right alongside your children. Thank you for letting us love your children!
