Philosophy

1. Was the work written in one long piece or many short pieces? Is there a theme to them? If so, explain the theme and how it was incorporated into the piece(s).
2. Compare the author at the beginning of the work to the end. Did he/she write it to convey an established point or did he/she seem to realize it while writing the work? If the latter, describe the progression to realization (of the point).
3. What did you learn from the work? Do you now look at the world/people/subject in a different way?
4. Find a statement the author made in the work that you don't agree with. Give an argument on why you think it's incorrect. If you can't find one, describe something that the work made you change your mind about a subject, event, idea, etc.
5. Do you feel that you understood the work? What were some parts you didn't understand? Would reading it over again be in order for full understanding?
6. Did you like this work? Why or why not?
